

Trump as the beginning of the end for Western Liberalism

For those unaware, Liberals are extremely narcissistic about their beliefs. Not in the US sense of the term, the whole spectrum of Liberal politics is this way. Nothing exemplifies this more than the book The End of History and the Last Man by Francis Fukuyama. The “end of history” is a term that’s been used by Liberals for a while (though not with such specificity), but the Last Man is thinly veiled attack on Nietzsche. Most readers will probably already understand what Nietzsche’s Last Man is, and those who call themselves Nietzschean can usually identify Last Man-esque characters in modern society. For Fukuyama, this Last Man is a good thing. This slave, driven by escapism & apathy is the culmination of all human history. This makes sense when you realize that Nietzsche’s favorite historical characters, most notably Napoleon, are harsh reminders of Liberalism’s failures.

Fukuyama specifically is almost comically narcissistic in this regard. Unlike previous generations who propagated some sort of “End of History,” he is very specific that the absolute apex of human development is Western Liberal Democracy as practiced in the US & EU. That’s right everyone, this is the peak of humanity. For context, Fukuyama was an instrumental figure in the original NeoConservative movement of the Reagan era, and only left this community due to not supporting the Iraq War. Note, he supported the war before the invasion but stopped around 2006 when it became unpopular & is now considered a Leftist figure overall. The notion that out of all human history, we hit our peak in the 1980’s sounds like a bad joke.

Regardless, the Trump campaign of 2016 & Brexit referendum threw a wrench in this theory because both these movements (and the spread of Populism as a whole) acted directly against Liberalism. Fukuyama praised the Biden administration for its return to normalcy, but in the wake of Trump’s reelection last week has shifted to believing that this Populist movement is the norm for the foreseeable future.

This isn’t the first hiccup with the theory either. The gradual decline in US hegemony & rise of blatantly illiberal countries like China have also been cited as examples of Fukuyama’s worship of Liberalism being misguided at best. If China can come so far as a dictatorship & command economy, clearly Liberalism isn’t that special.

This theory of Western Liberalism being the apex societal model is the basis for various Leftoids claiming that Trump heralds Fascism or that “we are losing our democracy!!!” It’s not that Trump is actually some Totalitarian figure, he just represents a rejection of Liberalism in favor of Populism. To the Leftoid, this represents a slippery slope allowing for the creation of a truly Fascist-esque system or Napoleon figure. This is why Trump is an important figure for the RW, regardless of any kvetching about Zionism or his lack of radicalism. It isn’t that Trump himself is a savior, it’s that he represents a turn in the right direction. Nietzsche once said, “The revolution made Napoleon possible: that is its justification. For the sake of a similar prize one would have to desire the anarchical collapse of our entire civilization.” This is the preconditions of that collapse. As I put forth in my article The Collapse & Post-America, we live in the decline of America & the postwar period it created. The Populist movement can be seen as fundamentally the rejection of the Liberal postwar system, as well as the axioms & institutions founded on that foundation. We are approaching our own French Revolution, though seemingly moving in the opposite direction.

Which brings me to Europe, which is facing its own Populist movements as well as moving away from the US. As some are probably well aware, the US is a major reason why many EU countries implement Leftist policies. This is mainly for less important countries like the Baltics, but is certainly a factor in the big players like France & Germany as well. Parties with similar ideologies tend to be linked internationally, and the US tends to advance Leftist interests in NATO & when divvying up aid. Vance’s statements (above) could lead to a similar but opposite effect. MAGA-esque movements in Europe may gain the favor of the US government. This means even more of a boost to LePen or AfD. This isn’t really necessary for many of these movements, having already proven extremely popular, particularly among the youth, but it could be pivotal in countries like the UK which has little true opposition in government & is heavily subject to censorship.

Like most major happenings historically, things tend to have a domino effect in the West from Europe to North America to Australia. There’s little reason to suspect that this will be any different.

Something else I wanted to hit on is California Governor Gavin Newsom’s recent threat to “leave the union” in order to avoid the federal government (soon to be entirely controlled by Trump supporters) & it’s coming policies, particularly on remigration. A few months ago, I touched on the Eagle Pass standoff & brought up that this situation (or a similar one) could lead to civil conflict since state & federal forces came to directly oppose each other.

What I hadn’t anticipated when writing that article was that the reverse situation may occur. The premise of that article was what may happen if Kamala won & Texas was forced to dig its heels in further. Now that Republicans have almost total control of all three branches of government, it only makes sense that the more committed Leftist regions would take the helm as opposition.

So, let’s take Newsom’s threat at face value & assume that he’ll hold true when push comes to shove. What would this look like? Firstly, California isn’t the Leftist republic many assume it to be. The state is almost completely Red outside of the coastline along the San Diego-LA-San Fransisco axis, as well as Sacramento. The hard Leftist regions do include the only practically important areas of California, though. The rest is just scenic mountains & deserts. Newsom would still control the things that made California important, namely its ports. This means that any peaceful succession of California is off the table, if anyone had some delusions of letting California be its own country & taking the Libtards with it.

That being said, don’t expect California to go down easy. This could be shut down incredibly fast, with a federal tactical unit arresting all members involved or a military unit occupying the capital of this hypothetical California within hours or days. If not, there’s a lot of militant Leftists that will absolutely move to California to become “freedom fighters.” Don’t expect some Vietnam scenario, but it could be a months long civil conflict. Expect heavy endorsement from Leftist names from some top Dems to Hasan Piker. A lot of trannies & Socialist Rifle Association types LARPing as “The Resistance.”

The federal response will likely only include the National Guard, probably not including the Cali one. Mainly ones from decisively Red states like Florida & Texas (ones who have reliably proved their loyalty in Eagle Pass), as well as federal “law enforcement” units the likes of which were seen in places like Portland during the 2020 Summer of Love. They may be seriously expanded & uparmed, but effectively the same. Depending on how far the conflict escalates, they may resemble the peacekeeping squads they were in 2020 to outright SOF platoons, similar to the cartel-focused militaries in Latin America.

Unless other Leftist governments or China immediately commit to supporting this hypothetical California independence, it will absolutely not succeed. No matter how many illegals or trannies get AR-15s, they’ll be annihilated by any RW or government paramilitary, let alone the actual armed forces.

I highly doubt any of this will play out, but it would be awesome if it did. The RWDS meme from 2016 could become reality. I don’t make gambles on unlikely scenarios though, so don’t necessarily plan on this occurring for now.

Hail Victory.

Meh, this mostly hot air IMO

Fun time though. I cannot wait for this segment of the jews plan to be over.

Edit: We represent the shift, not Trump. He represents an attempt to control the shift.

Liberal democracy and two party states are naturally subversive and open to parasitism. The US & EU were hardly democratic at their height (19th & early 20th century). They maintained power through their already built up wealth and sheer numbers/demographics in the latter 20th century and now, but these things have gradually declined and the system of liberal democracy is unprotected against illiberal societies and attacks from outside (or parasitism from within). These compounding failures have weakened the system and will break the system.

Furthermore liberal democracy has destroyed monogamy, marriage, and gender relations. It has also managed to postpone the age at which men and women mature through prolonged (useless) education. This has destroyed fertility rates and will end all liberal societies and gradually weaken them, no matter what. By replacing community with government along with the increasing wealth in society, society becomes more individualistic as people no longer rely as much on their family for retirement, help, or work. This coupled with dwindling family sizes, allows people to have no shame in degeneracy, they don't have to live with criticism or hardly get it by their family. Shame & honor mean nothing. Of course a government could apply its own version of shame and honor to remedy that but a democracy will never do so. Society will become crazy and degenerate and weaker.
